

EMPLOYABILITY SKILLS

These are six of the most important transferable skills when it comes to employability.

1. COMMUNICATION

Being able to share ideas clearly and in a variety of ways
For example, being able to discuss tactics on the tennis court

2. SELF-MANAGEMENT

Being able to set individual goals and take responsibility for personal actions
For example, setting yourself the goal of practising tennis twice a week

3. TEAM PLAYER

Working effectively with others to create the best possible outcome
For example, being a friendly and collaborative member of a tennis team or club

4. PERSEVERANCE

Being able to keep going even when things are difficult
For example, not giving up while you're losing a match

5. RESILIENCE

Being able to bounce back from failures or setbacks
For example, continuing to train even after losing a match

6. RESPECT

Treating others well, appreciating and encouraging them
For example, congratulating opponents if they win a game and thanking them for the match
